

NEW YORK TRUE "NANANA" TOWN

Does Not Show Much "American Push" in Matter of Public Service Companies.

UNITED STATES LEADS

IN NAVAL ARCHITECTURE

Growth of San Diego Explained by Director General of 1915 Exposition.

BY RALPH JOHNSTON.

By Leased Wire to The Tribune.
NEW YORK, May 20.—New York is to double her subway capacity—some day. The way she goes about getting there is typical of the big, lazy, good-natured city. I know it is the generally accepted idea that New York is a type of American push and energy which, wanting a thing, goes after it and gets it. There never was a more mistaken idea. Individual New Yorkers may be that way, but the city collectively is about as swift as molasses in January.

Witness the fact that New York is the only city in the country with more than 10,000 population that has horse cars, the only city of any size which permits grade crossings for steam railroads in the most congested section of the city and, above all, the only city in the world of any size whatever which would tolerate for twenty-four hours the subway crush. The situation would be funny if it was not sad. The city has plenty of money with which to build all the subways she needs, no less than three concerns have declared their readiness to operate them and help to build and equip them. Yet the authorities discuss and consider and postpone, while the citizens with more or less good nature submit to be compressed into the present subway cars to a degree which would make any self-respecting sailing ship rise in wrath.

In the matter of "nanana" the New York City authorities having this subway matter in charge have the Mexicans beaten seven ways from the ace. There is good news for the small boy in the announcement made by the health officer of the District of Columbia that the prodigious use of soap is injurious to health. There is hardly one of us who remembers his boyhood who will not regret that he did not know this.

Where American Navy Wins.

Captain Togo of the Japanese navy says the strongest feature of the American navy was not in its rapid numerical progress, backed by inexhaustible resources, or in superior shipbuilding facilities, but in America's highly advanced knowledge of naval architecture. "When it comes to the application of electricity," said Captain Togo, "America easily beats all other nations. The successful circumnavigation of the globe a few years ago by the American fleet really broke the world's record and furnished America with practical knowledge of the handling of a fleet which must be added to the store of her qualifications. All her naval bases and ports in the Philippines and Hawaii are nearing completion and when the Panama canal is opened America will occupy a predominant position in the Pacific.

"It is a very difficult matter to discriminate between two navies, the matter of superiority of armaments and the skill of officers and men, and hence the best way of comparing navies is to take just the ships. If Japan wishes to retain control over the Pacific she must build a fleet powerful enough to beat off the squadrons which a belated power might be able to send to the scene."

San Diego as Seaport.

Colonel D. C. Collier, director general of the San Diego Panama-California exposition, 1915, in speaking about the growth of trade, said: "A great trade empire is opening in San Diego. The Santa Fe is spending a large sum of money in perfecting its service between San Diego and Los Angeles. The new San Diego & Arizona railroad will be a short cut, putting the seaport in touch with a number of trunk lines and tapping all of the south and a greater part of the southwest, and will be on an easy grade. The Southern Pacific is in a position to handle an immense amount of traffic in southern California and the southwest. It is expected that the trade of the southwest for Pacific coast points, for the Atlantic seaboard by way of the Panama canal and for the Orient will converge at San Diego. In several hundred miles closer to the cotton belt of the south than the western ports that have heretofore handled the cotton trade. The new and fertile cotton country of Imperial valley, in the southeast part of California, is pierced by the railway line now under building from San Diego. The importance of the shipping will be greatly enhanced," continued Colonel Collier, "when vessels begin to pass through the canal and the work of construction marks the shortest distance in sea navigation, and that are from the Panama canal to Japan is within 100 miles of San Diego."
